The Judge and the Thief

There was once a man, Hassan, who kept all his money in a box under his bed. One day, he discovered his money was missing. He asked the judge for help.

"Your Honour," he said, "someone has stolen my money. There are many people living in my house but I do not know who is guilty."

The judge said, "Call all your housemates here and I shall find out who the thief is."

When all of Hassan's housemates appeared, the judge said, "I have some magic sticks of the same length. All of you will be given one stick. Bring the sticks back to me tomorrow morning. Only the thief's stick will grow longer by 5 cm."

Frightened, the thief tried to think of a way to cover up his theft. Finally he found a solution - he cut the stick shorter by exactly 5 cm.

"When my stick grows in the night, it will be the same length as the others," he thought, proud of his brilliant plan.

The next morning, when everyone gathered in front of the judge, the length of sticks in their hands remained the same - except the thief's! His was shorter by 5 cm. The judge pointed at him and declared, "It's you who have stolen the money!"

Adapted from 'Selected Fables from Ancient India'

51. Where did Hassan keep his money?

52. Who does "Your Honour" refer to?

53. What would happen to the thief's magic stick according to the judge?

54. Why did the thief cut his magic stick?
