"You can't believe how many bear tracks are out here (15) Blake said in a raised voice as he crunched noisily across the gravel. That expedition was going to be a challenging one.

Almost one person in five suffers from allergies. Most allergic reactions are quite mild.
and are limited to the part of the body that has come into contact with foreign substances. For example, someone who has accidentally brushed a patch of poison ivy with his or her hand may experience a painful rash and itching there.

(22)
Sometimes, a moderate reaction extends beyond the part of the body where the foreign substances are found. In the case of poison ivy allergy, this could include rashes on other parts of the body.
(23)

In a severe allergic reaction, there could be swelling in different parts of the body. If the throat swells, swallowing and breathing become difficult. In the most severe cases, death can result. More than 200 people die every year in the United States owing to food allergies.

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

In the past, people camped out of need. Soldiers and travellers camped when there was no town nearby to spend the night. Over time, people began to camp for fun and to get away from their fast-paced lifestyles. Nature in its untouched beauty is stunning to observe. Many adventurers travel into the wilderness for days, or even weeks, at a time. Camping is also a great way to spend a family vacation. 5

Before a camping trip, you need to pack some essential items. A trail map and compass are useful tools for navigating. In addition, a lamp or flashlight helps you get around in the dark. A first aid kit is necessary in case of scrapes, insect bites or sunburns. You also need equipment for building a shelter, cooking and living outdoors. You may want to bring other items, such as a camera, a book and a pair of binoculars. 10

After a good night's sleep, waking up to a beautiful view is thrilling! Most people look for a good view when selecting their campsite. However, campers must also keep safety in mind. Tents should also be pitched away from tall trees because branches could fall and hurt someone. Once a spot has been selected, pitch the tent on high ground. If the campsite is sloped, pitch the tent uphill. If it rains, water will drain away from the tent. 15

A camping trip can be challenging depending on the factors involved. These include the length of the trip and the remoteness of the campsite. A long trip or a distant campsite requires campers to pack more equipment and food. Campers heading to remote sites will need to plan their route carefully. The hike to the campsite and difficulty of the hike also add challenges to the trip. The length of the hike, the amount of elevation, and the roughness of the ground are factors to consider. "A short, flat, smooth path is suited for beginners; a long, steep, rocky path is for experienced hikers," Greg Savos, an experienced camper, advises. 20

There are also many potential dangers outdoors. Even seasoned campers should be prepared for unexpected weather changes and be wary of insects and wild animals. "Although it is rare for wild animals to approach or attack people, they are attracted to food. So, keep all camp food locked in a vehicle until they are needed. If I can't find a good place to store my supplies, I'll hang them up on a distant tree," Savos suggests. 25

Camping is a wonderful opportunity to learn about our natural world. With an open trail at your feet and a fresh breeze at your back, what is better than exploring the great outdoors? 30

Instead of throwing away your waste, why not make your own compost corner at home? By doing this, you could turn waste into something useful for your plants and soil. Compost is a (41) mixture that consists largely of decayed organic matter and is recycled into fertilising and conditioning land.

(42) There could not be a more environmentally friendly way of despoising your kitchen and (43) garden waste to by using it to make compost. It will better enable your soil to reefane nutrients, (44) moisture and air. To make your compost, use materials such as uncooked fruit and vegetable, kitchen waste (47) as well as shredded paper and cardboard. Keep your compost moist even not soaking wet. This (48) may mean watering it in dry weather. Covering it up will also help in the mentainance of the (49) moisture level and keep rain out. The heap of compost also requires air to circulate adikuately. Turn or fork your compost regularly to speed up decomposition.

Leave it for about three months and your compost will be brown and crumbly, filled with a (50) fresh earthy odour. This makes a great supliment to your garden. Better still, it costs next to nothing!

One afternoon, while Joseph was poking among the ruins of his old home, he found a tiny silver sword. About five inches long, it had a brass hilt engraved with a dragon breathing fire. It was a letter opener that he had once given to his wife for a birthday present.

While he was cleaning the blade on his jersey, he noticed that he was not alone. A small ragged boy sat watching him keenly. He had fair wispy hair and unnaturally bright eyes. Under one arm he had a wooden box, under the other a bony grey kitten. 5

For a moment Joseph thought it was his son, Edek. Then he realised that the boy was too small. Joseph walked over and stroked the kitten. "What's his name?" he asked.

"He hasn't got a name. He's just mine," said the boy.

"What's your name?" asked Joseph. 10

The boy pouted and hugged the wooden box under his arm. He watched Joseph warily from the corner of his eye. After a while, the boy said, "Give me that sword."

"But it's mine," said Joseph.

"You found it on my pitch. This is my place," the boy replied. Joseph then explained how his house had been set ablaze and how this rubble was all that was left of it. 15

"I'll give you food for it," said the boy, and he offered Joseph a cheese sandwich.

"I have plenty," said Joseph. He put his hand into his pocket, but it was empty. He looked at the boy's sandwich and saw it was exactly the one that Mrs Krause had given him that morning, only rather grubby now. "You little pickpocket!" he laughed. But before he could grab it back, the boy had swallowed most of it himself and given the rest to the cat, which was now purring contentedly. 20

After a while, Joseph said, "I'm looking for my family. Ruth is the eldest – she'd be fifteen now, and tall and fair. Then Edek, he'd be thirteen. Bronia is the youngest – she'd be five." He described them briefly, told him what he knew of their fate and asked if the boy had seen them. The boy shrugged his shoulders. 25

"Warsaw is full of lost children," he said. "They're dirty and starving and they all look alike." The boy's words made him sound indifferent. But Joseph noticed that he had listened intently and seemed to be storing up everything in the back of his mind.

"I'll give you this sword on one condition," said Joseph. "I'm not sure that my children are dead. If ever you see Ruth, Edek or Bronia, you must tell them about our meeting. Tell them I'm going to Switzerland to find their mother. To their grandparents' home. Tell them to follow as soon as they can." The boy grabbed the sword before Joseph had time to change his mind. He popped it into the little wooden box, picked up the cat and ran off. 30

Joseph called after him, "Meet you here in the morning – and don't let me down!"
