Martina's parents owned a fruit shop. Martina had just returned home from her father's shop where she often helped out, when she heard the alarm.

Grabbing her younger sister by her hand, Martina ran to the bomb shelter. It was a short distance from her house. The shelter was already crowded and Martina had to jostle her way in. Meanwhile, she was overwhelmed with anxiety as she prayed for the safety of her parents.

Everyone wondered if the alarm was a drill or if it was real. Just then, they heard the sound of helicopters and fighter jets above them. The two girls looked at each other nervously. Just then, Martina caught sight of her parents who emerged from among the throngs of people.

With tears of relief in their eyes, they stood with their arms outstretched when they saw their beloved daughters. Somewhat comforted after being reunited with her parents, Martina wondered how long they were going to be in the shelter.

Tom Murphy got off the chairlift and jumped for joy. Dazzling snow and alpine peaks stretched in every direction. It was the last day of Tom's week at the French ski resort of Les Deux Alpes.

5 Determined to make the most of it, the thirty-year-old plumber from South London had got up early, left his travelling companion, Elliott Garrett, sleeping off the previous day's exhaustion and headed up the mountain alone.

10 Two lifts and a snow-bus took him up to Dome de la Lauze, at 11,650 feet, the top of Europe's highest ski course. It was noon. He fixed the snowboard under his boots, positioned himself and with a jerk of his knees, he was off. Cold air stinging his cheeks and his board whistling softly, Tom carved exhilarating S-bends down the slope.

15 His plan was to leave the marked route and go in a different direction for about a kilometre to a chairlift where he had been with his friends the day before. When a rope blocked his way, he ignored warning notices and ducked under it. He knew that skiing away from prepared ski slopes was risky but it was more fun.

20 Tom's confidence faltered as the terrain began to look unfamiliar. The chairlift had vanished and there was no one in sight. He carried on more slowly. Then, he stopped again. Was he lost? There was a movement in the snow. Suddenly, a black crack sped across the slope from both ends of his board. Then, he felt the snow drop beneath his board. Rolling, tumbling, Tom realised that he was in an avalanche.

25 Now, tumbling down the mountainside in a whirl of snow, Tom's thoughts raced. Instinctively, he positioned his board and dug in his heels. The momentum shot him sideways across the slope until he burst out of the avalanche.

30 A smooth black rock loomed ahead. He dug gloved fingers into a crevice. Dangling, he watched the avalanche roar like a breaking wave down the valley. He looked up. The avalanche had carried him hundreds of metres. Nearly all the snow had been stripped away, leaving a narrow valley of bare rock. There was no way he could go back. His board provided a precarious foothold. Tom took one hand off the rock and took his walkie-talkie out of his pocket.

35 An energetic young man with short hair and bright blue eyes, Tom lived for thrilling sports that may put his life at risk. He played football three times a week. On a recent world trip, he had been skydiving, white-water rafting and bungee jumping. He had got into snowboarding while teaching football in a college as part of a sports degree. His latest ambition was to try base-jumping - throwing himself off high cliffs or buildings with a parachute. This snowboard holiday had been such a last-minute decision that he had not even told his family where he would be staying.

26. According to the first two paragraphs, Tom _____.
- (1) was disappointed that Elliott was still asleep
 - (2) was keen to go up the mountain without Elliott
 - (3) was upset that it was the last day of his snowboarding trip
 - (4) was intent on making sure that he made the most of his trip
27. The third paragraph tells us that Tom was very excited as _____.
- (1) he was all alone
 - (2) cold air stung his cheeks
 - (3) it was his first time snowboarding
 - (4) he was going down the slope in s-shaped bends
28. In paragraph 5, why did Tom's confidence falter?
- (1) His snowboard had given way.
 - (2) He was caught in an avalanche.
 - (3) He saw a movement in the snow.
 - (4) He was unable to locate the chairlift.
29. Which of the following words has the same meaning as precarious in line 37?
- (1) firm.
 - (2) rigid
 - (3) sturdy
 - (4) dangerous
30. From the passage, we can tell that _____.
- (1) Tom enjoyed thrilling high-risk sports
 - (2) Tom loved travelling around the world
 - (3) Tom had been forced to go on the trip by Elliott
 - (4) Tom's ambition in life was to teach football in college

Many birds are arriving earlier each spring as temperatures warm along the East Coast of the United States. However, the farther those birds travel, the less likely they are to keep pace _____ the rapidly changing climate. Scientists analysed changes in the timing of spring migrations of 32 species _____ birds along the coast of eastern Massachusetts since 1970. Researchers gathered data _____ capturing birds in nets, attaching bands _____ their legs, and then releasing them. Their findings show _____ eight out of 32 bird species are passing by Cape Cod significantly earlier on their annual trek north _____ they were 38 years ago. Temperatures in eastern Massachusetts have risen by 1.5 degrees Celsius since 1970.

Species, _____ as the swamp sparrow, migrate earlier _____ temperatures are warm and later when temperatures are cool.

The great crested flycatchers, which spend their winters _____ South America, are slow to change, though. Their migration times are not changing _____ the warming temperatures in New England.

Being slow to change in response to warming temperatures could have serious repercussions for long-distance migrant birds.

Section K: Comprehension Open-ended (10 x 2m = 20m)

Read the passage below carefully and answer questions 71 to 80.

5 There was a great thrashing about in the trees in the forest ahead. It was getting dark and I was having trouble walking and locating the road name on my map. I had a passion for seeing the world. This time it was New Mexico. I was cross-country to Taos through the mountains. I almost fell into a ditch along the road several times. But I managed to keep my footing on this desolate road. The growling ahead had me scared and apprehensive. I sat down in the darkness and waited.

10 What could make such a noise? I wondered. A bear? People? Don't be scared. I told myself. I was suddenly soaked in cold sweat. I kept still as I looked around, my adrenalin racing through my blood.

15 At the base of my little hillock were a dozen or so wild dogs sneaking up upon me. Right in front of the pack was the alpha, the leader of the pack. I was their prey. They were famished. I was about to be their kill. I watched and waited for the alpha, a big white canine, to catch my scent. He needed to know that I could hurt him. He was the only dog I was worried about. He was the key to my stopping their attack.

20 With bated breath, I kept myself very still. Then, suddenly and without warning I stood up with my arms in the air and yelled, "HEEEYEA!" I made myself as big as I could, waving at them threateningly. They ran off in a typical dog like fashion, but they stopped at a safe distance from me. They would be back to test this man and see how much stamina he possessed. This was a dog war, and I knew how to fight dogs. I would be ready for their return, and then I would attack their leader and make him cower.

I squatted down on top of my little hill and waited for their advance. Slowly, in the moonlight, the dogs returned. Growling and slavering, they encircled me. The white alpha male came at me from the front hoping to distract me from the rear assault being led by his female companion.

25 Menacingly, he began to bark and growl aggressively in short forward movements. At that precise moment, the large female dog came in quickly. It nipped my leg from behind. I came up again suddenly, with rocks in hand. I threw one at the alpha male and hit him squarely in the head. I spun around and hit the female in her body with a stone. She yelped and ran off. I assumed my position and anticipating their next return.

30 Suddenly, the alpha was in front of me again. I suspected that he did not like being hit by the rock and was back to settle the score. He was twenty yards from me and suddenly, he charged at me, hoping to catch me off guard so that his companion could attack me from the rear.

35 Indeed; my first rock missed the alpha as he continued to come in full speed at me. Fortunately, the second one hit him again straight in the snout. I turned to catch the female in her retreat, striking her at her thigh causing her to yelp several times as she ran off. I jumped with joy at the sight of the pack following their leader back to their hiding place.
