Once there was a peacock who was very proud.

"Just look at the colours of my feathers. I must be the most beautiful bird in the world!" he would boast.

When he says this, he would open his tail like a great fan and stand waiting for someone to come along and look at him.

The other birds hated the proud peacock. The crane, who was the leader of the birds, had an idea.

"I'll make that proud peacock look foolish," he told the others.

One morning, the crane walked past the peacock.

"Am I not beautiful?" asked the peacock.

"Your feathers may be more beautiful than mine," said the crane. "But I see that you cannot fly. Your beautiful feathers are not strong enough to lift you from the ground. My feathers may be dull, but my wings can carry me into the sky!"
