Patrick never did his homework. "It is not easy at all," he complained. He played baseball and basketball and Nintendo instead. His teachers told him, "Patrick, do your homework or you won't learn a thing."

One day, he saw his cat playing with a little doll and he grabbed it. To his surprise, it was not his doll but a man of the tiniest size. He had a little wool shirt with old-fashioned pants and a high tall hat much like a witch's. He yelled, "Save me! Don't give me back to that cat. I'll grant you a wish. I promise you that."

Patrick could not believe how lucky he was! Here was the answer to all of his problems. So he said, "Only if you do all my homework until the end of the semester. If you do a good enough job, I could even get As."

The little man frowned. He kicked his legs and clenched his fists and he scowled and pursed his lips, "Oh, how unlucky! But I'll do it."

And true to his word, that little elf began to do Patrick's homework. Except there was one problem. The elf did not always know what to do and he needed help. "Help me! Help me!" he would say. And Patrick would have to help -- in whatever way.

"I don't know this word," the elf squeaked while reading Patrick's homework. "Get me a dictionary. No, what's even better. Find the word and sound it out by each letter."

When it came to Math, it was just as bad. "What are times tables?" the elf shrieked. "We elves never need that."

Patrick wanted to tear his hair out. Was the elf helping him or was he helping the elf? He had to work much harder now. What he did not know was that he was learning and improving every time he helped the elf.

For many years, an old apple tree stood in the middle of a farmer's garden. As it had stopped bearing fruit, the farmer thought it was useless. He decided to cut the tree down. With a sharp axe in his hand, the farmer struck at the roots of the tree.

At once the tree shook violently and grasshoppers, sparrows and squirrels immediately came out of the tree. They surrounded the farmer, startling him. "Please, Sir," they begged him. "Do not cut down this tree. It is our only home."

However, their cries were in vain. The farmer raised his axe one more time and struck at the trunk of the tree. Suddenly, golden-yellow liquid began to drip out from the tree trunk. The farmer touched the liquid with his finger and cautiously tasted it. "Yummy, honey!"

The farmer realised that the tree was not so useless after all. Its hollow trunk had become the ideal home for the bees to make honey. He searched for a bottle to fill it with the delicious honey. His eyes twinkled at the thought of having honey every day for breakfast. He knew that the bees would make even more honey after he had taken some that day.

"Hey," he announced as he threw away the axe. "Since it is your home, I shall be kind and spare the life of this tree. You can live in peace now."

The sparrows, grasshoppers and squirrels breathed a deep sigh of relief. Although they knew he was lying, they were glad he had changed his mind about cutting the tree down. They immediately went into the hollows of the trunk to thank the bees.
