SECTION C: COMPREHENSION (MCQ)*( 5 x 1 mark )

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

A strange encounter happened to Sam once. He was lost. His father had told him not to wander away from the picnic grounds but he did not listen. He was so sure he could find his way back. He had done that so many times as a scout. However, he had been walking now for an hour and a half, and he didn't have the foggiest idea where he was. He sat on a fallen tree and put his chin in his hands, sulking.

Suddenly, Sam swore aloud, thinking that there was no one to hear him.

"That's not very nice language for a young boy," said a voice beside him, startling Sam who almost fell from that tree. "I don't like to hear young people swear, whatever the reason. You do have a reason, don't you?"

It was an old man dressed in dark, uncomfortable-looking clothes and heavy black boots. He had a thick beard, eyebrows that nearly covered his eyes, and a battered and shapeless hat that was pushed to the back of his head. Despite his shoddy appearance, Sam was still glad to see him.

"S-s-sorry I s-s-swore," Sam stuttered. "B-b-but I'm lost."

"Lost! Lost? What nonsense," the man said. "You know where you are. It's just the other people who don't know where you are, right?" Sam nodded nervously. "Of course I'm right," the man went on. He stopped and looked up suddenly, as if he had heard a noise. "Hmm," he said. "They're looking for you, you know, in the wrong places. City people!" He almost spat the last words out. "Come on, young boy. Follow me."

15

They walked for several kilometres but the surroundings remained unfamiliar to Sam. Sensing that he was feeling worried, the man pointed out all sorts of interesting things along the way, like animal tracks and tiny, hidden flowers. Sam watched in awe. Finally, they came to a large, flat, muddy area that stretched away to the left and right as far as Sam could see. On the other side, however, he could make out people and cars.

20

"Better take those fancy shoes off," said the old man. "They'll be gone before you know it."

Sam did as he was told. Then he stepped into the thick mud that came past his ankles. With his new friend walking beside him, he made his way across the muddy grounds.

30

After walking some distance, Sam reached the end of the muddy area. He saw his parents looking anxiously for him. His father was startled to see Sam slip and stop his way out of the mud.

"How did you find us?" Dad asked in amazement.

"My friend showed me the way," Sam explained.

35

"What friend?" Dad asked, still puzzled.

Sam turned around to show him, but all they saw was just a single set of footprints across the mud.

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the OMS.

SECTION H: COMPREHENSION

( 10 x 2 marks )

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

It takes a long time for a young elephant to learn to control its trunk, which contains thousands of different muscles. Baby elephants' trunks often wiggle around out of control, and the elephants sometimes trip over them. They also suck on their trunks, like a child sucking its thumb.

Elephants usually live between 45 and 60 years. They may lose and regrow their molar teeth six times in their lifetime. When their last set of teeth wears out, elephants can no longer chew food and they die. This is a common cause of death, as few predators can kill an adult elephant. In fact, there is only one animal that poses a real threat to elephants – humans.

A hundred years ago, five to ten million elephants wandered freely across Africa. By 1990, only around 600 000 were left. Many people feared there would soon be none left.

One reason why so many elephants died is that they no longer had enough land on which to roam in search of food. Land that was once occupied by elephants and other wild animals had been taken over by people for farming and raising cattle. With nowhere to go, the elephants starved. Another more serious problem is hunting. Elephant tusks are made of smooth, hard ivory, which is very beautiful and easy to carve. People carved ivory into all kinds of things from comb to pool balls to piano keys.

With more powerful weapons, it had become easier for hunters to obtain elephants' tusks. To meet the strong demand for them, hunters even killed elephants that were protected in wildlife reserves. Many people were willing to break the law and kill elephants when a single tusk was worth thousands of dollars. By 1980s, these poachers were killing up to 100 000 elephants a year.

The only way to put an end to poaching was to ban the sale of ivory. Thus, in 1989, a concerted effort was made by many countries to make trading of ivory a crime. Immediately, the demand for ivory fell and so did the price. It dropped from 400 dollars to 60 dollars per kilogram. With little money to be made from poaching, the slaughter mostly stopped.

Land for elephants remains a problem. In Asia, elephants live in the forests of Indonesia, Thailand and other countries. However, the forests are being cut down at an alarming rate. This results in fewer and fewer wild elephants as they have nowhere to live. A hundred years ago, 100 000 elephants lived in Asia. Now, there are fewer than 20 000. The only way to save elephants and other creatures is to leave them with enough land. In the coming century, as the number of people on Earth continues to grow, this will be one big challenge.
