It was very crowded at Dupers as they were having their annual sale. The atmosphere put my baby sister in a bad mood. I was flustered too, because I simply dislike crowds. We quickly headed to the Children's Department. I helped to keep an eye on my sister while my father chose suitable toys. My sister became restless; she started to throw tantrums and did not allow me to placate her. So, I was beginning to feel really angry with her. My father glared at her grimly and told her we would just cut short the shopping trip and return home. My sister cried more loudly. She sat on the floor and kicked her feet, wails loudly. Her loud wailing soon drew the attention of the other shoppers. My father was piqued. He tried to drag my sister up but she refused to budge. I squirmed with embarrassment and tried to think of a quick solution.

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

In a village in Selangor, Malaysia, where I grew up, coconut trees shaded the wooden houses, where fathers bowed to the earth working the paddy, mothers stayed at home and their children ran around barefoot.

When I was ten and my sister Aini was seven, we had a hard time; Father was not earning enough from his jobs at the rubber estate and the paddy factory. Finally he decided that he could make a better living collecting rattan from deep in the forest and selling it to a nearby furniture manufacturer.

Mother was extremely worried that tigers would eat him, but Father said that it was better to risk his life being eaten by a tiger than sit at home and not eat anything at all. So early one morning, he set out on his motorcycle looking for rattan. Suddenly, Aini and I had no way of getting to school, which was far from our home. I could think of nothing better than to miss school and play with my little sister. As we stood at the front door waving goodbye to Father, I whispered to Aini that we were going to scoop up tadpoles from the backyard pond and put them in a glass jar as pets. We both grinned in anticipation.

Our happiness did not last long. Mother suddenly appeared behind us with her hands on her hips and said, "What are you both doing here? It's getting late."

"Get dressed," she ordered.

"Get dressed for what?" I questioned. Mother's eyes bulged. "My, surely not for your wedding. For school, of course," she replied assertively. My jaw dropped. "Father is gone, and we can't walk to school, if that's what you mean," I cried. Mother shook her head and answered, "You're not walking. I'm going to take you to school today. There's your father's bicycle."

Looking towards the lawn, we saw an extremely old bicycle leaning against the coconut tree. The handle was bent into an odd, twisted shape and the right pedal was nothing but an iron rod. It had been quite some time since anyone had used the bicycle and I wondered if it even worked. I told Mother that the bicycle would be so slow that we would be old by the time we reached school. Irritated by my insolence, she told me sharply not to get smart with her or she would make my ears hot and tingling.

I looked at Aini for support. She declared that she would be ashamed forever if she went to school on that bicycle. Mother shot back that she did not remember adopting the prime minister's daughter. "So you're going to school on that today," she said. End of the argument. With hearts as heavy as the house, we got into our school uniforms with sour looks on our faces and stomped out of the house.

I spent six weeks at the bai, a kind of sanctuary for gorillas, in the Republic of the Congo, taking photographs of these fascinating creatures.

I was perched in a tree house. From here, I was able to view a clearing that drew my subjects from the dark forest and _____ the sunlight. I went _____
 (31) (32)
 doctor's orders, recovering from hepatitis but determined to photograph one of the three bais along the Lokwe River in Odzala National Park.

Elephants help keep bais open _____ clearing trees and churning the (33)
 forest floor to scoop up mineral-rich earth. Other animals move in to do the same _____ to graze.
 (34)

I camped far _____ the bai to avoid spooking the animals (35)
 _____ my scent. It paid _____ when I caught a gorilla family warily
 (36) (37)
 watching an elephant. I rose daily at 4.30 a.m. and fired _____ my stove to (38)
 make strong coffee and instant oatmeal. I then faced an adrenaline-pumping walk _____ thick foliage where potentially dangerous encounters with animals were (39)
 always _____ my mind. I know well the risk in facing a charging elephant or a (40)
 defensive male gorilla.

Rain and floods are creating havoc in many parts of the world. Australia is bareing the brunt of quirky weather patterns.

(42)

Residents of south-eastern Australia, which had recently battled savage bushfires and a long-standing drowht yesterday, ~~found~~ themselves confronting another climatic emergency – the region's worse flood in 37 years.

(43)

(44)

(45)

(46)

Yesterday, massive flood waters sweep across parts of the parched region, forsing hundreds to abandon their homes and biznuses. Officials warned the floods could worsen as rivers peaked.

(47)

(48)

Many roads and ~~schools~~ remain closed, and hundreds of homes is without power.

(49)

Meanwhile, the dayri farming town of Newry has disappeared under water.

(50)

It is not just Australia that is below the spell of the freaky weather. South Asia has also suffered an onslaught of severe weather, as storms and floods hit Afghanistan, India and Pakistan over the last week, killing more than 500 people and affecting about 900,000 in

A great part of Arabia is desert. Here there is _____ but sand and rock. The sand is so hot in the daytime that you cannot walk on it with your _____ feet. Here and there in the desert are springs of water
(51)

(52)

_____ down in the ground. Here the intense rays of the sun cannot (53)

_____ them and dry them up. These springs are few and far
(54)

_____ from one another. Grass covers the ground all around them. Fig
(55)

trees and tall palms surround the spring, _____ it a cool, green and (56)

shady place. This is indeed a welcome _____ for any hot and parched (57)

traveller seeking respite. Such a _____ is known as an oasis.
(58)

Some Arabs live in the desert all the year round. They live in _____ (59)

which can be dismantled very easily as they move from one oasis to another. This migration enables the nomads to _____ shade and grazing ground for their flocks of (60)

sheep, goats and camels. The Arabs are _____ to have the finest horses in the world. They are also passionate about their horses, acquiring equestrian skills of _____ them since young. They are very fond of their horses and love them as much as their loved ones. The horses are _____ in high esteem.
(61)

(63)

They are also treated with much _____. The Arabs even allow their horses to _____ their tents with their families. Not surprisingly, they never put (65)
(64)

heavy loads upon their horses and look after them very well.

A few weeks into the long holidays, I was beginning to feel rather restless. I had gone shopping with my friends, caught the latest movie in town, read all the books I wanted to, and now I did not know what to do with myself. I even contemplated on getting a part-time job, but I was too lazy. As I lay on my bed, my grandmother sighed and said, "Susan, why don't you tidy up your room? It is such a mess. Come on, you have slept enough. Get up now!"

Slowly, I dragged myself out of bed and wearily set about the mammoth task. It seemed impossible; so much junk strewn about the floor, magazines and books all over the table and cobwebs decorating the corners.

As the afternoon wore on, I began to feel happier actually. I suppose the sight of my tidier room must have lifted my spirits. Soon I found myself humming cheerfully.

After wiping the dust off my writing table, I sat down on my chair to rest awhile. My eyes fell on a sturdy metallic box at one corner of my room. I felt elated suddenly as I remembered what I had put in there. Inside were my most precious belongings: souvenirs, badges, friendship bands and other knick-knacks that I had kept as a schoolgirl. The thought of rummaging through those belongings further brightened my day.

15

I dragged the box to the centre of the room and tried to pry open it. It would not budge. Locked I thought; where did I put the key? My mind worked furiously. Oh yes, the key was in the left-hand corner of my writing table. I distinctly remembered putting it there. I opened the drawer and searched inside, but the key was not there. I removed the drawer and emptied its contents on the floor. After a few minutes of searching, I found myself boiling inside. There was no key. There was no key in the other drawer too. I wanted to scream.

20

Muttering oaths and curses under my breath, I searched all the possible places in the room. I spent a good part of an hour going twice over all these places, but I still could not find the missing key.

Finally, I stormed out of the room and yelled at my parents, questioning them about the key. Nobody could help me. They were unhappy with the way I had behaved. I went back into the room, stared at the offending box and gave it a kick. All I got was a painful foë.

I considered prying the box with a crowbar, but I decided against it because it was too beautiful to be destroyed. Then I tried opening the stubborn lock with whatever keys my hands could get hold of. It was futile and I gave up in despair. I pushed the box back into its corner.

30

Later that week, Mike, my younger brother, invited me to go fishing with him. I accepted his invitation. I dug up some worms while he prepared the fishing rods. Soon we were at our favourite spot by the river. I cast my line and waited for the fish to bite.

Suddenly, Mike yelled in delight. He had a bite and began pulling in his line. He had caught a big bass. Then from the corner of my eye, I saw something familiar. The weight that Mike had tied to his line. I grabbed the weight and looked hard and long at it. It was my missing key.
