The stench of ammonia rising off bat guano burns my nose, and the acrid vapours nearly choke me. A muffled roar rises from deep inside the abyss below me. Listening carefully, I can distinguish myriad clicks and squeaks amid the rush of beating wings. I peer down the beam of my headtorch into the 20m shaft and see blurred movement. In a moment, 110,000 little bent-wing bats will begin an evening's hunting. They will emerge en-masse from Bat Cleft, where I sit, a small, 2.5m by 9m fissure in the limestone sidewall of Mount Etna, Queensland, Australia.

At 7pm sharp, the first bats spiral upwards and out of the cleft and disappear into the waning twilight. The furore has begun. Soon hundreds are fluttering around me, their wing tips touching my face and arms as they burst up from the chambers 22m below. Bat Cleft is so narrow that bats must fly zigzag from one end of the cleft to the other to get enough altitude on each pass before they reach the open sky. So many bats spiralling upwards create a continuous wind in my face and a low-pitched roar such as you hear in a conch shell.

Slithering over the boulders close by is a small, dark snake about 80cm long - a spotted python Liasis maculosus. A big, green tree frog is already positioned on one of the boulders that the snake passes. The snake crawls over my boot and finally stops on a jagged rock that juts into the cleft. It anchors itself by gaining purchase on the pitted, rough limestone, and then stretches the upper half of its body into the air of the abyss. Bats make their turn at this point and bump into the rock, and the snake. The little python soon nabs a bat by biting from side to side when it feels touched. It pulls the bat into its constricting coils.

While watching this drama, I forget to check the frog. I look down, aghast at the amazing spectacle below me. The posterior of a little bent-wing bat hangs out of the mouth of the frog. In the next two minutes, the frog makes three gulping movements, and its bat disappears.

26. What was most likely the reason why the author was unable to see the bats clearly at first?
- (1) The torchlight was weak.
 - (2) He had night blindness.
 - (3) The bats were too deep in the shaft.
 - (4) He could smell the stench of ammonia.
27. Which word from the passage has the same meaning as the phrase "a sudden outburst?"
- (1) "furore"
 - (2) "myriad"
 - (3) "muffled"
 - (4) "en-masse"
28. What created a continuous wind in the author's face? (from line 13)
- (1) It was the acrid vapours from the bat guano.
 - (2) It was from the active volcano which was Mt Etna.
 - (3) It was from the bats fluttering around the author's face.
 - (4) It was from the bats trying to get enough space to gain altitude.
29. How is the snake able to catch bats?
- (1) It squeezes the bats.
 - (2) It stops on a jagged rock.
 - (3) It launches itself into the air.
 - (4) It uses its upper body to grab hold of the bats.
30. What is the "amazing spectacle" mentioned by the author in line 24?
It refers to _____.
- (1) a tiny bat
 - (2) the frog eating a bat
 - (3) the snake catching bats
 - (4) a bat flying into the frog's mouth

Back in the fifteenth century, in a tiny village near Nuremberg, lived a family with eighteen children. The father and head of the household, a goldsmith, worked almost eighteen hours a day at his trade.

Despite their poverty, two of the children had a dream. They wanted to pursue their talent for art but they knew that their father would never be financially able to send either of them to Nuremberg to study at the Academy of Arts. 5

After many long discussions at night in their crowded bed, the two boys finally worked out a pact. They would toss a coin. The loser would go down into the nearby mines and with his earnings, support his brother while he attended the academy. Then, when that brother who won the toss completed his studies in four years, he would support the other brother at the academy, either with sales of his artwork or, if necessary, also by labouring in the mines. They tossed a coin. Albrecht Durer, the younger of the two, won the toss and went off to Nuremberg. 10 15

Albert went down into the dangerous mines and for the next four years, financed his brother whose work at the academy was almost an immediate sensation. Albrecht's etchings, his woodcuts, and his oils were far better than those of most of his professors. By the time he graduated, he was beginning to earn considerable fees for his works. 20

When the young artist returned to his village, the Durer family held a festive dinner to celebrate Albrecht's homecoming. After the meal, Albrecht rose from his position at the head of the table to drink a toast to his brother for the years of sacrifice that had enabled Albrecht to fulfill his ambition. His closing words were, "And now, Albert, brother of mine, now it is your turn. Now you can go to Nuremberg to pursue your dream and I will take care of you." 25

Albert sat, tears streaming down his pale face, he sobbed and repeated, over and over, "No, brother. I cannot go to Nuremberg. It is too late for me. Look what four years in the mines have done to my hands! The bones in every finger have been smashed at least once, and lately I have been suffering from arthritis so badly in my right hand that I cannot even hold a glass to return your toast, much less make delicate lines on parchment or canvas with a pen or a brush. No, brother ... for me it is too late." 30

One day, to pay respect to Albert for all that he had sacrificed, Albrecht Durer painstakingly drew his brother's abused hands with palms together and thin fingers stretched skyward. He called his powerful drawing simply "Hands" but the entire world almost immediately opened their hearts to his great masterpiece and renamed his tribute of love "The Praying Hands." 35
