In 2009, Russian Prime Minister, Vladimir Putin unveiled a $1 billion effort to save the Siberian tiger. He planned to host an international summit with World Bank and had set the goal of doubling wild tiger numbers worldwide to 6500 by 2022. (21)

In China, Chinese political leaders and wildlife advocates are united in saving the world's last remaining wild tigers. Tigers are seen as revered creatures in Chinese folktales. Historically, they inspired everyone from poets to warriors. Wildlife experts applauded the efforts of the Chinese government to ban the trade in tiger parts used for traditional Chinese medicine. "China shut down an entire industry that made millions of dollars per year by making medicine from tiger bones," said Judy Mills, coordinator for the International Tiger Coalition, "I think we have wild tigers in the numbers we have today because China made that bold move." Indeed, the move helped to curb consumer demand - a demand that has driven poachers to hunt down wild tigers mercilessly. (22) (23) (24) (25)

5 It was a clear January night in 2003. French yachtsman Olivier De Kersauson was sailing across the Atlantic when his boat, Geronimo, mysteriously came to a halt. He was puzzled as he did not turn off the engines of his boat. There was no land for hundreds of kilometres, yet the mast rattled and the hull shuddered as if the boat had run aground. Through a porthole, he saw a giant squid, nearly nine metres long, wrapping itself round the boat. Just as quickly, the creature unhooked itself from the boat and swam away.

10 Researchers have studied giant squids that have washed ashore. In 2004, Japanese researchers photographed one at a depth of 900 metres in the North Pacific. No scientist has ever examined a live adult specimen up close. In recent years, "squid squads" have invested millions of dollars and deployed scores of submarines and underwater cameras in a race to be the first to do so.

15 Steve O' Shea, a marine biologist from Auckland University of Technology, was one of the squid hunters. Using small squids, he had been examining the conditions needed to ensure the survival of squids in captivity. He discovered that his previous tank had two lethal flaws: it was rectangular, which, for some reason, caused the squids to sink to the bottom; and it was made of polyethylene, a plastic compound toxic to squids. Since then, Steve had been using glass tanks which are circular to keep his small squids alive.

20 During Steve's sixth expedition, he faced volatile weather conditions, gusty winds and high waves. He noted that it would be too rough for fishing boats but he needed to look out for container ships on the rough sea as they could come up fast and there would be little time for him to react. After the expedition, he managed to collect a sample of the giant squid. "The sample is beautiful," he said. "But it's the live one that I want," he chuckled.

26. What caused the boat, Geronimo, to come to a halt?

- (1) The boat had run aground.
- (2) The mast had dropped into the sea.
- (3) The engine of the boat was switched off.
- (4) A giant squid had wrapped itself round the boat.

27. The "squid squads" spent millions of dollars _____.

- (1) to buy many submarines
- (2) to stock up on their underwater cameras
- (3) to be the first to photograph giant squids swimming in the ocean
- (4) to be the first to examine a live adult specimen of the giant squid

28. Steve O'Shea used _____ to ensure that his squids had a longer life span.

- (1) round glass tanks
- (2) round plastic tanks
- (3) rectangular glass tanks
- (4) rectangular plastic tanks

29. On Steve's sixth expedition, he did not consider _____ to be a potential danger.

- (1) high waves
- (2) gusty winds
- (3) fishing boats
- (4) container ships

30. Steve O'Shea's greatest desire as a giant squid hunter was to _____.

- (1) be a marine biologist
- (2) catch a live giant squid
- (3) go for a seventh expedition
- (4) collect many samples of small squids

Correct each word in bold for spelling and each underlined word for grammar. Write the correct word in the relevant box.

When plastic shopping bags were first introduced about 25 years ago, they were (41)

a huge global success. All over the world, shoppers take advantage of free plastic bags.

But now, many people are concerned about the serious environmental issues that (42)

surround plastic bags and are calling in changes.

(43)

There are several reason why one should not use plastic bags. Plastic bags are made from oil which is a non-renewable comodity. In the future, there will be no more oil. In fact, millions of tonnes of oil is used in ~~the~~ plastics industry every year.
(44)

(45)

(46)

Environmentalists argue that this oil could be used for other, more esensial, purposes.

(47) ~~of~~

Although some plastic bags are recircled or ~~disposed~~ properly, many of these plastic ^{thrown} bags are ~~disposed~~ into the seas. Hence, the lives of many marine animals are endangered where they ingest the plastic bags. In addition, when plastic ~~is~~ burried in rubbish dumps, it can take a long time to ~~breakdown~~ and when it does, toxic chemicals leat into the surrounding soil, causing more pollution. Similarly, when plastic is burnt, harmful substances are released into the atmosphere.

(48) (49)

Section K: Comprehension Open-ended (10 x 2m = 20m)

Read the passage below carefully and answer questions 71 to 80.

Around midnight, the group realised that something was ahead. Big and black, it loomed in the night sky blotting out the stars. Land! Kicking together, the four of them manoeuvred the log towards the shore.

5 One by one, the others left the safety of the log. They removed their flippers and wetsuits to air their skin. Their hips were bruised from banging against the log. "This island is Padawa," Kathy told her friends. "There's a village of fishermen just over the hill. We can go and get help tomorrow."

10 At dawn, Jim and Kathy set out to walk over the ridge to get help. The walk was too difficult for Kathy so she came back, leaving Jim to go alone. Carrying boulders from the beach, Charlotte and Kathy formed the letters SOS on the grassy bank. Kathy used the magnifying glass and tried to get a fire going, but dank smoke appeared instead.

The beach was pretty but inhospitable with its steep rock surfaces, dark trees and thorny undergrowth. The sky was blistering and there was no fresh water. Charlotte imagined a refrigerator filled with cold Cola but it did not help.

15 Helena's scream hit them like a crack of lightning. They saw her pointing at the sub-aqua gear piled above the beach ten metres away. Pushing its snout among the wetsuits was a sinister low-slung shape close to two metres long Komodo dragon. The lizard took Jim's wetsuit in its mouth. The women threw rocks at it. Kathy brandished a stick. Reluctantly, the giant lizard backed off and dropped the wetsuit. Then it turned and 20 ambled off, pursued by a salvo of stones.

The women were shaken. "What are we going to do when it gets dark?" said Charlotte. "Don't worry, they stay in their burrows at night," Kathy assured her. But what about Jim? With dragons here, this could not be Padawa Island after all. He was on a wild goose chase.

25 Shivering, Helena recalled what their tour guides on Rinca had told them. Komodo dragons would leap out of the undergrowth to ambush their prey – deer, pigs, buffaloes and sometimes humans. A boy had been killed outside the village a year ago and a Swiss who was out bird watching was thought to have been eaten a few years ago.

30 If they failed to kill a prey, the dragons would follow it. Their saliva, filled with bacteria, would bring death in a few hours. A 44-kilogramme dragon was seen consuming a 38-kilogramme pig in 20 minutes. One was observed charging ^{into} trees with a prey in its mouth to ram it further down its throat. And Jim would not even be on the lookout for them.

35 At dusk, the divers huddled under a tree. Exhausted, Charlotte was beginning to doze off when another scream jerked her awake. She opened her eyes and saw Helena's terrified face.

40 This time, the dragon was less than two metres away. It had picked up Helena's wetsuit hood next to her head. It backed off as the women threw rocks. Then it came forward again with its tongue flicking towards Helena's feet. She threw her diving belt at it.

The dragon bit on the belt and let it go. Kathy beat its head with the stick. The dragon held its ground, snapping at the stick, then it retreated.
