Section F – Comprehension MCQ (5 x 1) marks

Read the given passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

Hummingbirds are the tiniest birds in the world. They have amazing speeds and unbelievable colours. The Aztecs used dead hummingbirds for earrings and made entire cloaks out of their skins. As the skins are tough and pretty, they are often used for ladies' brooches, hat ornaments, and flower-type arrangements in the Victorian era.

These amazing stunt pilots are fascinating creatures with the most rapid wingbeats of any bird and a heart rate of up to 1, 260 beats per minute. The most impressive thing about hummingbirds is their energy. If a man weighing about 80kg wanted to live the life of a hummingbird, he would have to burn 150,000 calories a day and lose 45kg of perspiration per hour!

10

Rumour has it that the inventor of helicopters observed hummingbirds in flight. Both helicopters and hummingbirds can hover, take off, and land vertically. Both also fly sideways and backwards. Hummingbirds rotate their wings in circles, enabling them to fly in any direction. Choppers fly with rotating blades, but they are unable to fly upside down like the hummingbirds sometimes do when being attacked.

15

Despite their quick beating wings, hummingbirds are not the fastest flying birds. These skilled fliers also have difficulty walking – they can hop a little, but need to use their wings to move, even when they are on the nest. With beaks like swords and tongues like extra-long straws, they power themselves on nectar, visiting up to 1000 flowers a day. Hummingbirds also feast on spiders and strain gnats while in mid-air.

20

Plants that depend on hummingbirds for pollination seem especially made for them. Their blossoms project out to prevent the birds from entanglement in leaves and vines. Trumpet-shaped flowers accommodate their long beaks. Although hummingbirds have no sense of smell, other feeders are not enticed because these flowers lack fragrance.

25

Hummingbirds have colour vision similar to humans and are not good singers, managing only chirps, squeaks and twitters. Their magnificence lies in their colour. Their feathers are iridescent, with the colours changing constantly depending on the light source and the angle of the viewer. These amazing creatures make their appearances in a variety of places. If you ever spot them, do not miss out on a spectacular air show!

Section K – Comprehension (10 x 2) marks

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

In a little village in Argentina, little Tito lay in bed, trembling under a thin blanket. His mother, Juana, touched his forehead, then burst into tears. Kino, her husband, looked out of the doorway of his hut and sighed deeply. Juana turned towards Kino and said, "Dear, why won't you go and fetch the doctor? Tito is burning up. Look at his face, it is all red!"

Kino replied, "Oh, my dear, I know poor Tito is very sick. But do you think Senor George would come and treat Tito if we have no money to pay him?"

Juana did not respond as she knew it was the truth. Senor George would only treat those who could afford his services. Unable to bear the sight of his crying family, Kino left the hut in the forest and walked towards the beach.

10

Kino was a pearl diver who struggled to make ends meet. Every morning, he would row out to the ocean and dive for pearls on the sea bed. Though pearls were extremely valuable in the cities, Kino was unaware of their true value. Often, he would trade a small bag of pearls for a bag of rice. The recent hurricane had made things worse for Kino. The ocean was extremely dangerous, with waves over four metres high sweeping the coast for the past month. Brave but foolish pearl divers who had gone out during the hurricane season were found days later, as lifeless as logs in the sea. Kino had not gone out to the ocean since the hurricane started and he was running out of money to buy food and other necessities for his family.

15

Kino stared at the raging waves and then at his canoe on the beach. Without blinking, he ran into the canoe and paddled furiously against the strong waves. After paddling for half an hour, he found a calm spot near the reefs and dropped a little anchor to secure his canoe. He looked up to the skies, prayed to all the gods he had known, took a deep breath and dived into the ocean. He swam with all his might towards the sea bed and began to search under the reefs for oysters with pearls. To his dismay, all he found were a few oysters with no pearls in them.

20

As Kino returned to the surface to catch another breath, he could see a huge oyster half-buried in the sea bed. He sucked in all the air that he could, then dived in towards the huge oyster. Inside the oyster was a pearl, a pearl bigger than any he had ever seen or imagined. He forced open the oyster and dug the pearl out. As he held on to the pearl, he realised that it was so heavy that he struggled to rise to the surface. After tossing the football-sized pearl into the canoe, he climbed into it and paddled furiously back to shore to see his family.

30

"Tito, Juana, look at this! We are safe! We can go and get Senor George!" Kino shouted excitedly as he entered the hut.

35

Juana looked at Kino and instead of a smile, she continued weeping. Kino dropped the pearl and ran over to touch his son. His body was cold. The scorpion's sting was left untreated for too long. Kino wept like he had never wept before. He then looked at the pearl and then at Tito, and shouted, "What's the point of this giant pearl when I could not even save my son? I wasn't even around for his last breath!" In rage, he ran out towards the beach again, and threw the pearl with all his might into the devouring ocean. He sank onto the sand and wept. 40

Adapted from "The Pearl" by John Steinbeck.
